He assured the foreign secretary that his government had no intention of infringing on the rights of Great Britain, or any other power, and if a mistake had been made in the seizure of the Malacca, unquestionably the steamer will immediately be restored and damages would be paid.

Paid.
The ambassador pointed out that it was unreasonable to suppose that the Malacca had been seized without the commander of the St. Petersburg having good grounds to believe/that she had contraband on beard. Unless this supplied is effortually disproved the had contraband on board. Unless this suspicion is effeffetually disproved the matter will have to go before a prize court, which procedure Great Britain herself follows. In the meantime Russia will make full investigation in or-der to establish definitely the grounds on which the commander acted. The on which the commander acted. The ambassador also informed Lord Lansdowne that he had telegraphed the British protest to St. Petersburg, and said it would receive the immediate attention of the emperor and Count Lamsdorff, Subsequently Count Benck-endorff informed Lord Lansdowne that inquiries were at once begun and that a prompt reply would be made. Grave Mistake Made.

With respect to the question of the passage of the Dardanelles which passage of the Dardanelles which Great Britain has raised, it is said here that both the British and Russian dip-lomats hold the view that this does not demand the immediate attention which the Malacca incident requires. It is pointed out here that the Russian po-sition generally is as follows:

Dardanelles Question.

The treaties regarding the Dardanelles prohibit passage of the straits by warships. Russia has no intention of violating this provision, and has not asked Turkey to do so. But the treaties do not forbid ships from traversing the straits with arms and munitions. Turkey or any other power has nothing to say consequently about the nothing to say, consequently, about the armament of ships after their passage through the straits. Russia holds that not a word in the treaties forbids action such as taken by the St. Peters-burg and Smolensk. Russia, it is clearly made known at

There is reason to believe that Great Britain is exchanging views with other powers regarding the operations of the volunteer fleet steamers, and the hardships thereby inflicted on neutral commerce, or to which it is liable. The state department at Washington parships thereby inflicted on neutral commerce, or to which it is liable. The state department at Washington particularly has been kept informed of the developments in the matter. It is said in a responsible quarter that the state department is giving special attention to the legal aspect of the question of the seizure of contraband, and it is thought Secretary Hay may consider that the danger which menaces American commerce passing through the Red sea is sufficient to warrant the issue of a general declaration respecting the attitude of America. This would be welcomed by the foreign office here, which believes the principles actuating America are those it is striving to uphold. Germany also, it is believed here, is in a mood to welcome some international declaration tending to increase the liberty of neutral commerce.
